

MIECHV First Teacher

Statewide Baseline Performance Measures Report

October 1, 2018 – September 30, 2019

Alabama's First Teacher Home Visiting Program is funded in part through federal investments from the Maternal, Infant, and Early Childhood Home Visiting Program (MIECHV). First Teacher provides voluntary, evidence-based home visiting services to at-risk pregnant women and parents with young children.

Home Visiting builds upon decades of scientific research and provides voluntary, culturally-appropriate, individually tailored supports to families in their homes. Supports include information about children's health, development, and safety, and when appropriate, referrals to support services.

First Teacher has implemented a parent educator-focused technical assistance team to provide targeted support and ensure that high-quality reflective supervision is provided at the service-delivery level. Technical assistance uses a continuous quality improvement process and statewide data system to ensure the use of current best practices and maintenance of model fidelity. Furthermore, the technical assistance team addresses the need for comprehensive early childhood professional development by collaborating statewide across the early childhood system and implementing statewide core competencies.

Like all Federal Home Visiting Program grantees, Alabama uses effective, evidence-based home visiting models. Alabama leverages federal funds to implement the following evidence-based models to serve children and families across the state: Home Instruction for Parents of Preschool Youngsters (HIPPPY), Nurse-Family Partnership (NFP), and Parents as Teachers (PAT).

In Alabama, home visiting is coordinated by the Alabama Department of Early Childhood Education (ADECE, formerly known as Department of Children's Affairs or DCA). After an extensive needs assessment in 2010, Alabama received funding from the federal MIECHV investment to expand existing home visiting and build a system for home visiting services in the state. Expanded implementation of home visiting services throughout the state began in 2011.

First Teacher is led by a team of early childhood specialists at ADECE who administer both state and federal funds to community-based organizations throughout the state through the three above named evidence-based models. Each organization works with ADECE's First Teacher team to ensure delivery of high-quality home visiting services and creation of a systematic and coordinated approach to assess the multiple positive impacts on families.

This report presents information about children and families served through the Alabama First Teacher Program for the most-recent funding year. It also includes an assessment of system performance success across federally required benchmark measures.
